

YOUR READING LIFE, BY THE NUMBERS

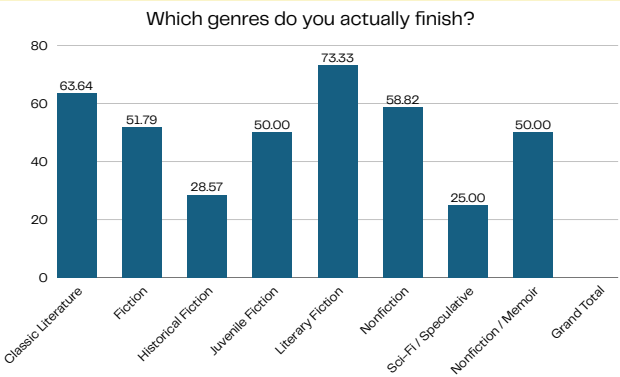

5 years of audiobook borrowing from Wellington City Library what the data reveals about how you read

Between 2020 and 2024, your annual borrowing grew from just 6 audiobooks to 46 which is a 411% increase. 2025 is already tracking at 25 books with months still to go. Across all five years, you've borrowed 128 audiobooks in total.

But when exactly does the reading happen? The answer might surprise you.

Your overall average completion rate is 88.7% which is impressive. But dig into the genres and a clear pattern emerges: some genres you devour, others quietly defeat you.

But, only 2 out of 7 fully finished.

You borrowed the most books in Autumn with 43 books, but it is also your worst season for finishing with only 44% of Autumn borrows getting completed.

With so many books borrowed, how many actually get finished?

Across 127 books borrowed with recorded progress, over half (108 books) crossed the 75% threshold, while a small cluster (19 books) stalled right at the start.

- June & February are your biggest reading months which are 19 and 17 books respectively
- 72% of your borrows are auto which are returned at exactly the 21-day limit
- Wolf Hall (37 hrs!) was borrowed twice and only finished once

Each year you borrow more audiobooks and most of the time you even finish whatever you start, with the rate of fully completed titles standing at 55%. However, the genre does play a role: Historical Fiction has one of the lowest completion rates at only 65%, while Sci-Fi and Classics have levels above 95%.

Then, those 8 books you barely started?

They all were auto-returned after the 21-day period, meaning the time ran out even before you really got to them. The data suggests your reading is not just about motivation, it is quietly shaped by season and genre in ways you may never have noticed.

What to do next

Try this: When you borrow a long Historical Fiction title, start it within the first day or two of borrowing. Don't let the 21-day deadline creep up. For shorter listening windows, lean into Sci-Fi or Classics, where you're almost guaranteed to finish.

Note: Completion percentages reflect progress at the moment of return. Books auto-returned at 21 days may show partial completion even if you intended to continue. The data reflects borrowing patterns, not necessarily reading preference.
